1 US lifts a nationwide ground stop after air-traffic 'communication issues' halt every flight

Why it matters: The world's busiest airspace shut down for hours, and the knock-on delays run into the weekend.

FACT The FAA stopped all flights across the United States on Friday, citing extraordinary circumstances and safety, after communication problems at air-traffic control centres. Officials said no threat had been detected. Flights resumed after a stop of several hours, but passengers still faced delays and cancellations on Saturday, and the FAA has not yet published a full cause. CLAUDE A system-wide halt from a communications fault, not an attack, is the worrying part: it suggests the US air-traffic network has too few fallbacks. Expect the episode to feed the long-running fight in Congress over funding to modernise the FAA's ageing equipment.

2 Bitcoin falls to about $65,400, below the $66,000 level traders called the line in the sand

Why it matters: A sixth straight weekly loss tests a trend that has held for three years.

FACT Bitcoin traded around $65,400 on Saturday evening, down about 4.5% in 24 hours and roughly 14% over seven days, according to CoinGecko. It is the sixth weekly loss in a row. The fall comes as the dollar strengthens, US 10-year yields stay above 5% and the AI trade wobbles after Jensen Huang's exit from Nvidia. OPINION The Bitcoin Layer (Nik Bhatia): argues that $66,000 is the trendline that has held Bitcoin up for three years; losing it opens a move below $50,000 and could extend the bear market by a year, even though long-term valuations look historically cheap. CLAUDE The weekly close on Sunday night matters more than one evening's price, since weekend trading is thin. The bigger driver is outside crypto: as long as the dollar and bond yields keep rising, Bitcoin trades like a leveraged bet on liquidity, not as a safe haven.

3 A Microsoft 365 outage knocks out Outlook and Teams for Swiss companies and public offices

Why it matters: One supplier's failure stopped email and meetings across Swiss businesses and authorities for a working day.

FACT A global Microsoft outage on Friday disrupted Outlook, Teams and other Microsoft 365 services, and swissinfo reported that Swiss businesses and public authorities were affected. Microsoft said services were recovering during the day while some disruptions continued. CLAUDE For Swiss administrations this revives an old debate: the federal administration is moving to Microsoft 365 despite warnings about dependence on a single US provider. A day without email is an inconvenience; the same dependency during a crisis would be a security problem.

4 Gulf hedges after Trump walks away from Iran talks: Turkey and Qatar sign a defence pact

Why it matters: A day after Washington said it needs no deal with Tehran, regional powers are building their own security ties.

FACT President Trump said on Thursday that the US does not need a deal with Iran, ending talks Gulf states had backed. On Friday, Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan hosted Qatar's Emir Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad Al Thani in Istanbul, where the two signed new agreements. UNCONFIRMED Al Jazeera reports that the agreements include a mutual defence pact, and Euronews reports that Iranian lawmakers are debating a shift in nuclear doctrine and an exit from the Non-Proliferation Treaty; neither is confirmed by a second outlet yet. CLAUDE Turkey already has a military base in Qatar, so a pact would formalise an existing tie rather than create a new alliance. The NPT debate is the more serious signal: Iranian MPs have threatened this before as leverage, but a formal exit would make new Israeli or US strikes far more likely.

5 Tanker strikes a New Orleans paddleboat with 129 passengers; 32 taken to hospital

Why it matters: A collision on the Mississippi raises questions about traffic between ships and tourist boats on a busy river.

FACT A tanker hit the American Heritage river cruise boat on the Mississippi in New Orleans on Friday, leaving the paddleboat partly submerged. It was carrying 129 passengers; Al Jazeera reports that 32 were taken to hospital. The cause is under investigation.

6 Pope Leo XIV draws hundreds of thousands on an emotional return to Peru

Why it matters: The first US-born pope is back where he served as a bishop, in a region where the Church is losing ground.

FACT Pope Leo XIV celebrated Mass for hundreds of thousands of people at Pampas de Pimentel near Chiclayo, the city where he was bishop for eight years, and led a youth prayer vigil at Lima's National Stadium. He holds Peruvian citizenship. CLAUDE The trip is also about competition: evangelical churches have grown fast across Latin America, and a pope who calls Peru his second home is the Vatican's strongest answer.

Europe wants a seat at the Ukraine peace table, but cannot agree on one voice

FACT After US envoys met Vladimir Putin in Moscow this week, European governments are pushing to take part in future talks, and Euronews reports that Washington and President Zelenskyy now support a European presence. OPINION European leaders (via Al Jazeera): fear that a US-led process lets Moscow and Washington decide Ukraine's future over Europe's head. CLAUDE Europe pays most of the bill for Ukraine but has had little say in the talks. A small group of countries speaking for the EU would be easier to fit into a negotiation than all 27 members, but only if the rest accept being represented by it.

Google's cheapest Gemini 4 costs 15 times more than Claude Haiku and GPT-6 Luna

FACT Google launched Gemini 4 Hydrogen, its lowest-cost Gemini 4 model, at $1.50 per million input tokens and $7.50 per million output tokens; it becomes the free-tier model and will power AI features in Google Search. Simon Willison notes that Claude Haiku 5.5 and GPT-6 Luna cost $0.10 and $0.50, and that Google's larger Gemini 4 Carbon and Argon double in price to $4 and $20 on 1 December. CLAUDE The price gap says Google is betting on capability, not cost, at the low end; its own Search traffic absorbs the expense. For everyday work such as summarising site reports or tagging drawings, the cheapest models from Anthropic and OpenAI are now hard to beat; test Hydrogen only where its answers are clearly better.

Mises Institute: limit immigration by cutting the state, not by building walls

FACT As President Trump threatens to double tariffs on Mexico over a migrant caravan and Spain faces a crisis at its Ceuta border, the Mises Institute's Ryan McMaken published three free-market ways to reduce immigration. OPINION Ryan McMaken (Mises Institute): proposes suspending all naturalisation, cutting off welfare for migrants and abolishing anti-discrimination laws, so that migration is limited by what the market and private property owners accept, while the state shrinks. CLAUDE The argument is consistent on its own terms, but suspending naturalisation would create a large permanent class of residents without political rights, which sits poorly with liberty. Switzerland is a partial test: tight naturalisation and residence-based rules have not stopped high immigration, because the labour market keeps demanding it.
